Opera to Replace ADSs with Ordinary Shares Listed Directly on Nasdaq

OSLO, Norway, November 17, 2026 — Opera Limited (NASDAQ: OPRA), a leading global browser and AI agent company, today announced it will replace its American Depositary Shares ("ADSs") with its ordinary shares listed on The Nasdaq Global Select Market. Each ADS will be exchanged automatically for one ordinary share. Holders' economic interest and voting rights are unchanged, and the ordinary shares will trade under the company's existing ticker, "OPRA".

The transition simplifies Opera's listing structure and ends the annual and per-dividend depositary fees currently paid by ADS holders. By listing ordinary shares, the company also removes a structural barrier for certain equity indexes and investment funds whose mandates restrict investment in depositary shares.

The ADSs will trade as normal until the close of the Nasdaq session on Friday, December 4, 2026, followed by the automatic exchange and the start of trading of ordinary shares on Monday, December 7, 2026. The transition is subject to customary conditions, including Nasdaq approval and the ordinary shares becoming eligible for settlement through The Depository Trust Company ("DTC").

Holders of ADSs through a broker or bank do not need to take any action. ADSs will be exchanged automatically, and ordinary shares will be credited through DTC under CUSIP G67700107 and ISIN KYG677001078. Consistent with the deposit agreement, ADS holders will be charged a one-time cancellation fee of $0.05 per ADS on the exchange date. The Bank of New York Mellon, the depositary for the ADS program, will send a notice of the exchange to ADS holders.
